Time

 It is forever changing, never the same as it was before.
 It was a minute here,
 A century there.
 It saw the birth of everything,
 And it will see the death of all.
 We will regret after we waste it.
 We wish we had more when we run out.
 However, when we do have it, we don't use it wisely.
 We waste it and believe that we'll have it forever.
 We don't know that it'll finally leave us.
 It is neither a friend nor an enemy.

Butterflies and moths belong to the same insect family. Both feed on leaves when they are little, and feed on the juice of flowers when they are a grown-up. Although they look alike, there are a few differences.

First, moths are nocturnal, usually traveling at night. However, butterflies rest at night and fly during the day. When butterflies rest, they usually fold their wings back. But when moths land and rest, they spread their wings out like an airplane.

The pupa is a time that butterflies and moths hide inside a case. Though both have a case which can protect the pupa, what they make are quite different. Moths make a soft case, but butterflies make a hard one.

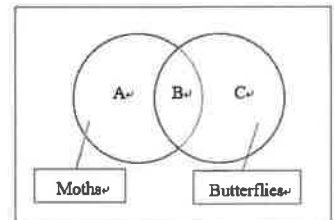

If we look closer, we'll find out the bodies of butterflies are usually longer and thinner, and these of moths are shorter and fatter. Also, butterflies usually have more bright colors on their wings than moths do.

It appears that we have these rules to tell the differences between them, but there are still some exceptions. For example, the Madagascan sunset moth, is brightly colored and active during the day.
