Last Wednesday, Lily started her first part-time job at Mr. Good. She works from 6 p.m. to 10 p.m. every day. Mr. Good is only five minutes' walk from her school, so she can get there on time right after school. On the first three days, Lily washed the dishes, cleaned the kitchen, and learned to make pies. That wasn't difficult. She just needed to follow the recipes from the cook and then got the delicious pies. In the next two days, many people came here for dinner, and she was busy bringing food to them. She even had no time to eat. Lily felt tired but happy because she could make new friends here. Today is her sixth day of work, and now she's on the way to Mr. Good. She can't wait to meet different people.

In Taiwan, people want kids and machines to be good and behave. They say "guai guai" to kids, but to machines, they put bags of a local snack, Guai Guai, on them. There is a story about the history of this practice. A graduate student in IT had a big report to write for school. When they worked on it on the computer, it broke down. So, they put the snack, Guai Guai, on it, and then, it worked with no problems. The story spread from one person to another. Soon, people started to put Guai Guai on their own computers.
