May was planning a three-day trip with the other families. What's more, their goal was to train kids to learn to pack and make friends with others in a group. These parents think playing and studying hard are both important in life. Before the trip, May found one packing list on the Internet to help kids learn how to pack well. She told her kids, "Follow the list and pack. Do not forget to check after packing. If you want to bring things not on the list, please write them down in Other Items to Remember."

The four families had kids mark the places they want to go. Each kid needed to search for the information about the place and introduce it. During the trip, they went mountain climbing, visited museums, took a boat, and went biking. They even got up early to watch the sunrise and ate famous tofu breakfast. At midnight, they watched millions of stars in the sky. The kids shared interesting stories and played lots of card games. They had fun taking this trip and learned how to make friends with others. They plan to go on a trip again next year.

Olivia is studying in junior high school in Taiwan. Classes are over at ten past five. After arriving home, she usually spends one hour having dinner with her family. But if her mom doesn't come home in time, it will take her less time to eat dinner because she always eats instant noodles. Luckily, this only happens once every two months. Most of the time, Olivia finishes her dinner at seven thirty.

After dinner, she always plays games on her cellphone and chats with her classmates online. If her dad comes to visit her, they will watch a movie together. That's why she usually forgets about time and homework when having fun with her friends or her dad. Then, if Olivia feels tired, she goes to bed right away and feels sorry the next day. Her behavior always makes her mom and her teacher angry. They want her to do her homework and study first. Olivia is going to be a ninth-grader next year. She decides to take their advice and do something different. She thinks it's better to study first and then play later. After all, it's time for her to set a goal and stop letting her mom down.

Daedalus was one of the finest artists of his time. He was also great at making things. King Minos of Crete knew that, so he invited him to his place. Minos wanted Daedalus to make a maze for his monster, the Minotaur. The artist agreed happily, and he took his son Icarus with him.

Daedalus worked hard on the maze. However, when he finished it, Minos would not let him go home. The king didn't want Daedalus to tell everybody his secret. So, he ordered the artist and his son to stay in a tower and didn't let them go out. Daedalus thought long and hard, and he finally found a way out. He made wings out of bird feathers and wax carefully for Icarus and himself.

After Daedalus and Icarus put them on, the artist told his son not to fly too near the sun because it would melt the wax. He also told him (?) They then jumped off the tower and were flying through the air. Icarus loved the feeling, and he was getting happier and happier. However, he was also flying higher and higher.
